

Michelle Caruso-Cabrera

Michelle Caruso-Cabrera has thirty years of experience at the nexus of finance, economic development, and communication. She is currently the chief executive officer of MCC Productions.

Most recently, Caruso-Cabrera ran for city comptroller in New York City. She was the top Latino vote-getter citywide in June 2021. She also ran against Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez in the Democratic primary in June 2020.

Prior to running for office, Caruso-Cabrera was an anchor at CNBC, which she joined in 1998. She became the network's first chief international correspondent and specialized in covering economic crises and the effect of government policy on economic development. She began her career at Univisión Spanish-language news, where she produced stories relevant to the immigrant experience. In 1993, she received an Emmy for a series she coproduced, Orphans of the AIDS Crisis.

In 2018, she was invited to join the board of a large public financial institution, becoming one of the first Latinas in the country to break through to the board room. She oversaw and helped manage the launch of the institution's rebranding during her two-year tenure. Caruso-Cabrera currently serves as president of the board of directors of Ballet Hispánico. She has a BA in economics from Wellesley College.
