

Ethan Bronner

Ethan Bronner is a senior editor at Bloomberg News, which he joined in 2015 after seventeen years at the New York Times, most recently as deputy national editor.

Bronner is a graduate of Wesleyan University and the Columbia Journalism School. He began his journalistic career at Reuters in 1980, reporting from London, Madrid, Brussels, and Jerusalem. From 1985 to 1997, he worked for the Boston Globe. He started as a general assignment and urban affairs reporter. He went on to be the paper's Supreme Court and legal affairs correspondent in Washington and then its Middle East correspondent, based in Jerusalem. He then accepted a position with the New York Times, where he was the paper's national education correspondent from 1997 to 1999 and its education editor from 1999 to 2001. In 2001, he transferred to the paper's investigative unit, which focused on the September 11 attacks. A series of articles on Al Qaeda that Bronner helped edit during that time was awarded the 2001 Pulitzer Prize for explanatory journalism. He then served as assistant editorial page editor and in 2004, he became deputy foreign editor. From 2008 to 2012 he was the Times's Jerusalem bureau chief. In 2012, he spent a year as the paper's national legal reporter, then became its deputy national editor.

Bronner is the author of Battle for Justice: How the Bork Nomination Shook America (Norton, 1989), which was chosen by the New York Public Library as one of the 25 best books of 1989.
