Isaac Stone Fish

Isaac Stone Fish is the founder and chief executive officer of Strategy Risks, which enables clients to mitigate regulatory, political, compliance, and ESG risks in both the United States and China. Fish is the author of America Second: How America’s Elites are Making China Stronger, a book that discusses American political and business leadership’s deep ties to China and how this impacts the United States. Fish also serves as a Washington Post global opinions contributing columnist, a contributor to CBSN, an adjunct at NYU’s Center for Global Affairs, a visiting fellow at the Atlantic Council, and a columnist on China risk at Barron’s. He is a Truman National Security Project fellow, and a senior advisor to the Korea Society. He served as a senior fellow at the Asia Society’s Center on United States-China Relations, the German Marshall Fund, and as the Asia editor at Foreign Policy Magazine. A fluent Mandarin speaker and formerly a Beijing correspondent for Newsweek, Fish spent seven years living in China and has visited every province, municipality, and special administrative region. He is an experienced speaker on United States-China relations, and his views on international affairs are widely quoted on CBS, CNN, NPR, Bloomberg, the Guardian, the New York Times, and other major news media.
