

Jacob Weisberg is the chair of the Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) and the executive chair of Pushkin Industries, an audio production company he co-founded with Malcolm Gladwell in 2018. Prior to Pushkin Industries, Weisberg served as chairman and editor-in-chief of the Slate Group, a unit of the Washington Post company. At the Slate Group, he launched publications including The Root, Double X, and The Big Money, and managed Foreign Policy magazine and foreignpolicy.com. He launched Slate's podcasting program in 2005 and its membership program, Slate Plus, in 2014. Weisberg joined CPJ's board of directors in 2011, was elected vice-chair of the board in 2018, and was elected chair in 2023. A native of Chicago, Weisberg attended Yale University and New College, Oxford, as a Rhodes Scholar. From 1989 to 1994, he worked as a writer and editor at the New Republic. From 1994 to 1996, he covered politics for New York magazine. In 1996, he joined the new internet magazine Slate, where he covered the 1996 and 2000 presidential campaigns as their chief political correspondent. Weisberg served as editor of Slate from 2002 until 2008. He has also been a contributing writer for the New York Times magazine, a contributing editor of Vanity Fair, a reporter for Newsweek in London and Washington, and an editorial page columnist for the Financial Times. Weisberg is the author of several books, including The Bush Tragedy, which was a New York Times bestseller in 2008 and Ronald Reagan (2016). With former treasury secretary Robert E. Rubin, he co-wrote In an Uncertain World, which was published in 2003. His first book, In Defense of Government, was published in 1996.