

Jason D. Schloetzer

Jason Schloetzer is an associate professor of business administration and area chair of accounting and business law at Georgetown University's McDonough School of Business. He collaborates with companies to study how executives collect and use information to make decisions and evaluate firm and employee performance. His work appears in leading academic journals and has been presented at numerous universities and conferences, including twice at the World Economic Forum in Davos-Klosters, Switzerland.