

Kevin Ball

Kevin Ball is Deputy National Intelligence Officer for the Western Hemisphere at the National Intelligence Council where he leads strategic analyses for the White House, Congress, and other relevant stakeholders on US priorities in the region. He has served in a variety of national security roles. Recent assignments include State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research covering North American and Arctic geopolitics as well as DoD on issues ranging from counterterrorism in the Levant, Central American migration, and Latin American civil-military relations. Kevin has served field tours as a civilian intelligence officer and an Air Force civil engineer throughout South America, the Middle East, Central and South Asia, and the Pacific. He recently completed doctoral work at Johns Hopkins University where he also has an MA and has earned a BA from Rollins College.