

Michelle Caruso-Cabrera

Michelle Caruso-Cabrera has thirty years of experience at the nexus of media, finance, and politics. She is currently the CEO of MCC Productions and a CNBC contributor.

Caruso-Cabrera was the first Latina anchor at CNBC and the network's first chief international correspondent. She joined CNBC in 1998 and spent more than twenty years covering economic crises and international markets as well as interviewing presidents, prime ministers, and CEOs. She has reported live from Ukraine, Russia, Venezuela, Iran, Cuba, Greece, and Mexico, to name a few. She began her career at Univisión Spanish-language news in 1991, where she produced stories relevant to the immigrant experience. In 1993, she received an Emmy for a series she coproduced on the AIDS crisis.

Named one of the most influential Hispanics in America by Hispanic Magazine, Caruso-Cabrera sits on the international advisory board of the Instituto Empressa in Madrid and serves as president of the board of directors of Ballet Hispánico in New York City. She is a member of the Economic Club of New York and has a BA in economics from Wellesley College.