

Catherine Eng is a Public Policy Manager at Facebook, where she works to identify areas in which industry interests and US foreign policy priorities converge. Her portfolio primarily focuses on the intersection of foreign policy and technology, and implications for the future of the internet. Most recently she served as a Policy Analyst at Google Jigsaw, which builds technology to tackle some of the toughest global security challenges facing the world today. During this period, she took the lead in guiding the East Asia research agenda for Jigsaw including assessing business insights through providing the functional expertise on global policy and security.

Prior to Jigsaw, Catherine served as the Chief of Staff to Stephen J. Hadley at Rice, Hadley, Gates & Manuel, LLC (RHGM), a boutique international strategic consulting firm co-founded by former Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, former Secretary of Defense Robert Gates, former National Security Advisor Stephen J. Hadley, and former diplomat Anja Manuel. During her time at RHGM, in addition to overseeing the operations of the Washington, D.C. office and supporting clients in their expansion into emerging markets, Catherine shaped her expertise in U.S.-China relations through assisting Mr. Hadley in his advocacy for improved bilateral relations by launching a strategic dialogue and staffing him at Beijing conferences.

Previously, Catherine has also served in a number of other public sector roles including as a legislative aide in the U.S. House of Representatives and also a short stint in the White House Office of the Vice President. She's currently a CFR Term Member, and holds an MBA from the Stern School of Business and a BA from the University of Michigan.
